

UNIVERSAL HUMAN VALUE

Assignment No:1

Aim:

“What do you mean by your natural acceptance? Illustrate with examples. Is it invariant with time and place?”

Ans:

Natural Acceptance:

Natural acceptance is process to understand ourselves first .Natural acceptance implies unconditional and total acceptance of the self, people and environment also refers to the absence of any exception from others. Once we fully and truly commit ourselves to natural acceptance, we feel a holistic sense of inner harmony, and fulfilment. Actually acceptance is way to accept the good things naturally. It also refers to the absence of any exception from others. In other words, Natural acceptance is way to accept the good things naturally.

Experiential validation is a process that infuses direct experience with the learning environment and content. It may be regarded as a philosophy and methodology in which the direct experience and focused reflection of the individual helps to increase knowledge, develop skill and clarify values.

The following summarizes the natural acceptance below:

- It does not change with time/age
- It doesn't depend on place
- It does not depend on our beliefs or past conditioning
- It is always there within us
- It is the same for all of us.

Example:      Loyalty

Loyalty is the ultimate sacrifice. It is a strong feeling of faithfulness, commitment, and devotion. Loyalty is a characteristic that only lies in very few human beings. It can't be bought or misplaced. Loyalty is an essential attribute in people's lives. It allows them to gain trust and respect that they need whether in executing their jobs or granting promises to other people. Being loyal and faithful is also an important moral value that people should practice in the society.

However, it is the most valued because human beings yearn for trust, devotion and commitments, but because one may display some of these things doesn't mean that they are fully capable of truly being loyal. Loyalty can be defined as moral character, an honest outlook and disciplined manners. First, moral character is a positive character trait. It is determined by how someone acts. Moral character is the existence or lack of virtues such as integrity, courage, fortitude and honesty.

Yes, Natural acceptance does not change with time. it remains invariant with time.
